

Secure the judgment to act in a world under pressure

ssfworld.org

SSF sponsors don't buy ads. They co-develop the webinars that put their expertise in front of the decision-makers they need to reach.

This document outlines how organizations work with SSF, what each engagement includes, and what a long-running sponsorship looks like in practice.

27,000+ Subscribers across government, corporate, academic, and nonprofit sectors	500–2,000 Registrants per webinar, with strong on-demand viewership	40% Average live attendance; the rest and more watch the recording	300+ Webinars produced since 2009, building a deep archive

Who sponsors SSF. Universities, foundations, nonprofits, public agencies, professional associations, and policy-engaged companies that want to convene credible webinars on security, sustainability, energy, climate adaptation, public health, resilience, and civil society.

Two Ways to Sponsor

SSF works with sponsors in two formats. The right one depends on whether you're advancing a single event or sustaining a presence on a subject across a series of related webinars.

Single Webinar Sponsor

$5,000 to $10,000 typically for the webinar itself

For organizations advancing a specific campaign, research release, policy moment, or thought-leadership event. The most common entry point for new sponsors.

- Topic, framing, and panel developed in partnership with you
- Panel seat(s) for sponsor experts
- Sponsor named on the dedicated webinar landing page hosting the video and event details
- Sponsor logo on registration page, recording, and promotional emails
- Co-branded promotion to the SSF list, plus SSF promotion through outside outlets and social media
- Sponsor-defined marketing questions added to the post-event exit survey
- Audience analytics, attendee composition, and survey results delivered to the sponsor
- Recording hosted on its own landing page for continuing visibility
- SSF-assisted follow-up support available as an optional add-on (see Getting Results, below)

Topic Sponsor

From $20,000, depending on series length and scope

For organizations sustaining a presence on a subject they work on. A Topic Sponsor takes on a defined subject area within one of SSF's three programming tracks and sponsors three or more connected webinars, planned together.

- Everything in the Single Webinar Sponsor package, applied to each webinar in the series
- Joint development of the topic and series arc within one of SSF's three tracks
- A named topic page within the relevant SSF track, credited to the sponsor, hosting the full series of webinars in one place. The page carries the sponsor's logo, a brief description of the sponsor's role and interest in the subject, and links back to the sponsor's own site
- Consistent sponsor branding across all webinars in the series
- Aggregated analytics and survey data across the series, not just per-webinar
- SSF-assisted follow-up support available as an optional add-on (see Getting Results, below)

Example: the ASU Lightworks Wildfire series, found in the Climate Adaptation and Natural Hazards track.

Why a Topic Sponsor series compounds.

A sponsor who buys three separate Single Webinar sponsorships on three unrelated topics reaches three cold audiences. A Topic Sponsor reaches one increasingly warm audience across the series. Registrants who return for successive webinars have demonstrated interest twice, three times, four times. That is a warmer, more qualified prospect pool than any first-time registrant.

SSF retains editorial control of webinar content. Sponsors help shape framing and suggest panelists. That editorial independence is what keeps the audience returning to the programming.

The Audience

SSF subscribers are professionals in government, academia, corporate sustainability and security, nonprofit advocacy, and consulting practice. The audience composition has been stable across 15 years of programming.

Who actually shows up: a representative example

The Missing Link in Wildfire Mitigation (January 2026), the third webinar in the ASU Lightworks Wildfire series within SSF's Climate Adaptation and Natural Hazards track, drew 630 registrations from 41 countries and 49 US states.

Federal: FEMA, USDA Forest Service, NOAA, U.S. Department of Energy, National Park Service, Natural Resources Conservation Service, Congressional Research Service, and the U.S. Senate.

State and local: Washington Department of Natural Resources, Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation, Maryland Department of the Environment, Arizona Department of Forestry and Fire Management, Arizona Department of Transportation, Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment, California Department of Fish and Wildlife, plus 50 other state and local agencies.

Universities and research institutions: Arizona State University, George Washington University, University of Washington, Northern Arizona University, SUNY ESF, University of Idaho, plus 30 other institutions.

Energy and utilities: Tucson Electric Power, Shell, Salt River Project, CPS Energy, Sandia National Labs, EBMUD, Energy Trust of Oregon, Madison Energy Infrastructure, Sonoma Water, plus 20 other companies.

Consulting firms: TRC Companies, CDM Smith, Parametrix, plus 80 other firms.

Energy and utility participation on wildfire programming reflects the industry's stake in fire risk and grid reliability. Energy and Security track webinars draw deeper representation from utility and grid sector organizations.

SSF's next scheduled webinar, What Is Actually Wrong With the American Grid? (September 2026), an Energy and Security webinar, has already drawn 700+ registrations (as of mid-August 2026), including Edison International, CPS Energy, Enel S.p.A., ExxonMobil, Siemens, Black Hills Energy, FERC, Argonne National Laboratory, and 45+ other energy and utility organizations.

Breadth and seniority are consistent across topics. See recent and upcoming programming at ssfworld.org/energy-and-security, ssfworld.org/climate-adaptation-and-natural-hazards, and ssfworld.org/security-and-society.

Getting Results From SSF Sponsorship

A webinar is like a good lunch. Someone pays the bill, everyone shows up, the conversation is real, and then people go back to their offices and the day moves on. It has a short tail. That's the missed opportunity many sponsors don't plan for.

The webinar itself is the broadcast: 500 to 2,000 registrants including federal officials, corporate leaders, university researchers, and consultants who chose to attend because they care about the topic. That's top-of-funnel reach into an audience most sponsors could not assemble on their own. The broadcast delivers real value on its own. Sponsor experts get panel presence with a decision-maker audience. The recording keeps working on its dedicated landing page for months after the event.

The follow-up is the narrowcast: targeted outreach to the specific registrants a sponsor most wants to reach, informed by exit survey data and framed around the value the sponsor delivered on the panel. The narrowcast is where webinar attendees become active leads.

SSF helps sponsors do both. The broadcast is what SSF runs. The narrowcast is what SSF helps the sponsor organize and execute, when the sponsor chooses to invest in that layer of the program.

Why the follow-up matters. Attendees who signal interest have a short attention window. A registrant who filled out the exit survey with interest in what the sponsor does is warm now. In two weeks they're cooler. In two months they're back to cold. Reaching them in the first three weeks turns interest into conversation. Waiting turns it into a lost lead.

ASU Lightworks has sponsored SSF for 14 years and roughly 60 webinars. What sustains the relationship is not the webinars alone. Lightworks treats each webinar as the broadcast and works with SSF to run the narrowcast against the audience it surfaces. That's the model that has generated collaborations and panelist relationships Lightworks wouldn't have built otherwise.

How it works, stage by stage

Before the webinar. Set clear objectives for what a successful campaign looks like beyond attendance. SSF and the sponsor promote to their respective networks. SSF also promotes the webinar through its own social channels and to media contacts and industry networks that reach adjacent audiences.

During the webinar. Position sponsor experts on the panel to establish authority with a new audience. Use the exit survey to ask sponsor-defined questions that surface interest and intent. SSF handles all logistics and delivery.

After the webinar. Every sponsor receives the full registrant list with names, titles, organizations, and sector classifications; attendance data showing who registered, who attended live, and who watched the recording; and exit survey results including the sponsor-defined marketing questions.

For sponsors who add follow-up support. SSF helps them turn the data into outreach. That includes identifying the highest-value prospects from the registrant list, segmenting the rest by sector, and shaping the outreach itself. Outreach can take a range of forms: email sequences the sponsor's team adapts and sends from their own systems, invitations to small online sessions with the sponsor, or other formats scoped to what the sponsor is trying to achieve.

The recording continues to work. Whether or not the sponsor adds follow-up support, the recording keeps drawing viewers on its dedicated landing page over the following months. Those viewers become additional prospects the sponsor can approach on their own timeline.

What the follow-up support costs. Basic follow-up support typically runs 30 to 60% of the webinar delivery cost, scaled to what the sponsor actually needs. SSF and the sponsor scope the work together as part of the contract.

Sponsors who use SSF only for the broadcast still get real reach into a decision-maker audience. Sponsors who also invest in the narrowcast get the pipeline and relationships that come from working the audience the webinar surfaced.

How Sponsors Have Used SSF

Arizona State University, Lightworks Initiative

ASU Lightworks is the Topic Sponsor for Wildfires within SSF's Climate Adaptation and Natural Hazards track. ASU brought the topic. SSF and ASU framed the series together. The wildfire program currently includes three completed webinars, one in production, and two more in planning, with ASU team members appearing on panels alongside government land management agencies, finance and technology companies, and peer institutions.

Over time, Topic Sponsorship builds something a single webinar cannot: a recognized sponsor presence on a subject, and a growing network of relationships with the agencies, companies, and peer institutions that show up across the series.

"Lightworks works on energy and decarbonization, and the questions that touch them, workforce, technology, public policy, community action. SSF has been our platform for putting those subjects in front of policy and practitioner audiences since 2014, across roughly 60 webinars. We bring substantive perspective and the experts we know; SSF brings its own deep network for panel recruiting, editorial judgment on how to frame each conversation, audience reach, and the full production. We treat SSF as top-of-funnel and work with SSF to run the outreach that turns the audience into ongoing relationships. The results have been collaborations and panelist relationships we wouldn't have built through our own outreach."

Bill Brandt, Director of Strategic Initiatives, ASU Lightworks

Island Press

Island Press is the nonprofit publisher of books on environment, sustainability, and public policy. Across more than fifteen webinars over a decade, SSF worked with Island Press to bring its authors into direct conversation with the policy and practitioner audiences their books were written for. The partnership extended Island Press's reach beyond the audiences that book publicity typically touches.

"SSF was invaluable in connecting our authors with the policy audience. We collaborated on over 15 webinars across a decade of partnering. It was an opportunity to make significant impact to the current work and add to the discussions in a substantive way. SSF brings the right people to the table every time."

Julie Marshall, Vice President and Director, Marketing and Sales, Island Press

Bring Us Your Topic

Most sponsorship conversations start with understanding what your organization is working on and what kind of programming would advance it. Bring a specific topic if you have one, or come ready to think one through together.
